

INSTRUCTIONS

1. Nominate the timekeeper.

It must be a trustworthy person. Everyone here is probably a scoundrel of some sort, so choose wisely.

2. Decide on the stake.

Choose a nice round figure. Seriously, if you take this chance to empty your pockets of change, you're stumping up a round for the table.

3. Decide what the bet is.

See betting card for options.

8 SIMPLE RULES

- 1. The timekeeper holds the money. Oi! Not in a pocket, in plain view please.
- 2. The timekeeper's decision is final. Well, unless they're taking part too... in that case, watch them like a hawk. It's always the quiet ones.
- 3. The person on the timekeeper's left goes first.
- 4. No colluding with the best man. That counts as cheating. (He's drinking G&Ts though, just sayin').
- 5. The timekeeper reveals whose time was closest and they are declared the winner! Who'd have thunk it?
- 6. If you win, don't celebrate too loudly – it's their big day, not yours.
- 7. If you lose, don't cry too much. The best way to drown your sorrows? Tequila. Do it.
- 8. No pressure should be put on the winner to buy a round. It's unfair to pick on them. Just because they're stingy, dry, boring and literally no fun does not mean it is acceptable to make smart comments about them when they go to the loo.

7 FORFEITS

Ah yes! For those poor fools who got it so shockingly wrong, you didn't think you would get away that lightly, now did you? The person furthest from the actual speech time must choose from one of the following forfeits:

1. Dance seductively with a granny/grandad.
2. Start a conga line. Lead everyone outside.
3. Stand up on the chair and announce "Body shots on me!"
4. Take to the stage and tell everyone that you have written a poem to celebrate the wedding, then recite the lyrics to 'Sexual Healing'.
5. Awkwardly shake hands with as many distant relatives as you can. Winking at them while doing so is a must.
6. Challenge the priest to a dance off.
7. Whisper to the bride's mother/father what room you are staying in ...and walk away.
